My mother loves gardening. Although we live in a 5-room HDB flat, she has been creative enough to transform our balcony into a mini garden filled with lots of greenery and attractive colours. This has certainly brightened up our whole living room. The guests to our home will definitely not miss it. She has planted yellow and peach roses, orange freesia, money plant, purple orchids and some ferns. The purple orchids are one of her favourites.

Despite working as a full-time beauty consultant and doing the household chores, my mother still manages to find time for gardening. Her love for gardening started since she was a child. She used to dig and play around in her grandparents' garden. They lived in a big bungalow then. My grandmother taught her the skill of gardening. My father is also very supportive of her hobby. He often buys her books on gardening and plants. He helps to water and weed the plants every evening. When he sees that the plants have out-grown the pots, he will buy her bigger pots.

"Seeing the seedling grow into young plants and later, bloom into flowers is like watching your children grow and that gives me lots of satisfaction," she said, beaming proudly at her mini garden. As for me, I enjoy watching my mother tend to her plants although I do not have green fingers like hers!

Section E: Comprehension (Open-ended)

Read the following passage carefully. Then write the answers for questions 39 to 43 in the blanks provided. (5 x 2 marks)

There was once a boatman who earned his living by transporting passengers from one side of the riverbank to the other. One day, while he was resting, a trader came and asked, "How much do you charge for a trip?"

"Eight coins each way," answered the boatman.

The trader claimed that it was too costly. He told the boatman that he would only pay him six coins. The boatman did not say anything and began to row his boat towards the opposite bank. When he was about to reach the other side, he stopped and said, " You may get down here."

Upon hearing this, the trader raised his voice at the boatman. "What! You expect me to get off here, right in the middle of the river?"

The boatman smiled and replied politely. "Sorry sir, six coins will only take you here while eight coins will take you to the riverbank."

"Well then, take me back to where we came from," instructed the trader. He thought the boatman would think that it would be troublesome to send him back and would just send him to the other side.

The boatman just followed as instructed. When they arrived, the boatman asked for twelve coins. The trader then realised that the boatman was really serious about the fare.

He said, "I'm sorry. I will pay you for all the trips you've made. Please send me to the other side." The boatman began to row towards the opposite riverbank.
