My first encounter with giraffes in the wild was a revelation. I was travelling with a friend, a Kenyan, in Samburu National Park in Kenya's far north. I was new to the continent and was (16) dazzled by everything I had seen. But as we rounded a bend in the forested area, my jaw dropped. There, no more than 6 metres before us, was the largest living thing I had ever seen: a two-storey-tall reticulated giraffe (17) biting gently the leaves of an acacia tree. In the dappled light, we had nearly crashed into it – my first lesson in giraffe camouflage – yet her manner was utterly (18) collected. She barely stopped eating to acknowledge us, but that one look was all I needed. I was (19) hooked.

When I went home, I told everyone about those miraculous beings. Most of my friends nodded politely, but my best friend looked at me very wisely, nodded and said, "Of course. Tall blondes."

Of course, I felt that I could understand and (20) associate with giraffes, as someone who reached 1.8 metres as a thirteen-year-old could. I understood the mixed blessings of being taller than most of the crowd.

One of the strengths of our camp programme is the emphasis on keeping camp journals by participants. The following journal entry was written last year by Kendrick Beh, a Secondary One student who was a camp participant for four consecutive years.

This morning, I wished I could just zip myself up in my sleeping bag and escape everyone's notice. There was an activity called "Soaring Eagle" lined up for the day and it had caused me many sleepless nights.

I first noticed the name of that activity listed in the camp programme, and my curiosity was aroused. I had never heard of it and Adventure Camp had never included it in previous years so I had no clue what it was all about. I could not wait to find out and asked my friend, Kevin, if he had heard of such an activity. For a split second, I thought I caught Kevin giving me a sly look. Then, he told me that he tried it during a camp he had gone for and it was an experience he would never forget. He had to jump off a fifty-metre platform wearing only a parachute-like piece of equipment and whizz over a muddy river filled with creepy-crawlies before he could finally land on open ground! My eyes almost popped out! My greatest fears combined! I could feel myself breaking out in cold sweat. For once, I wanted to give Adventure Camp a miss.

Thankfully, I did not chicken out. As I sat in the briefing room listening to Instructor Alex's instructions for "Soaring Eagle", I knew that I'd been taken for a ride. "Wait till I get my hands on you, Kevin!" I muttered under my breath.

"Soaring Eagle" turned out to be one of my favourite camp activities, featuring a mere one-metre jump and no creepy-crawlies!

Mother Teresa was born Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu. She was the youngest of three children of (29) _____ Albanian builder in Macedonia. At the age (30) _____ 18, she joined the Order of the Sisters of Our Lady of Loreto in Ireland. She trained in Dublin and chose (31) _____ name of Sister Teresa, in memory of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux.

(32) _____ December 1928, she began her journey (33) _____ India and continued to Darjeeling, at the base of the Himalayan Mountains, (34) _____ she would continue her training towards her religious vows. Soon (35) _____, on January 6, 1929 she arrived in Calcutta to teach at a school for girls. While in Calcutta, she was moved by the presence of the sick and dying on the city's streets.

Something happened (36) _____ September 10, 1946, while she was in a train heading to Darjeeling where she was to go on a retreat and recover (37) _____ suspected tuberculosis. Mother Teresa recalled: 'I realised that I had the call to take care of the sick and the dying, the hungry, the naked, the homeless – to be God's Love in action to the poorest of the poor. She neither hesitated (38) _____ questioned the call. That marked the beginning of the 'Missionaries of Charity.' She and her fellow nuns gathered dying people off the streets of Calcutta and cared for them during the days before they died.

In rapidly growing cities such as Beijing and New Delhi, air pollution has become very severe. Respiration diseases are on the rise, flights have been grounded and the 40.

public is often warning against letting children play outside.

Chokingly thick blankets of smog are often a by-product of economic growth.

41.

42.

which results in more vehicle on the road and more burning of fossil fuels, espeshelly coal. The bad air can be deadly. Outdoor air pollution, both in cities and rural areas, premeturly killed 3.7 million people worldwide in 2012, according by the World Health Organisation. With two-thirds of the population expected to live in cities by 2050, the need to ease urban pollution is partikulerly acute.

46.

The problem goes beyond respiratory health and kwality of life. In a recent study, 47.

it was found that in India, short-lived air polutans such as ozone and black carbon, 48.

along with the changing climate, cuts crop yields in 2010 by half. Rules to make cars 49.

and fuels cleaner helped achieve the redukshens in some cities. However, they still 50.

struggle in air quality issues and this suggests that the fight against air pollution remains a challenge for cities dealing with it.

In 2003, the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) infected over 8,000 people. It took over 700 lives worldwide. (51) _____ March to May 2003, SARS raged (52) _____ Singapore, where 238 people were infected. Various national prevention measures were put in (53) _____ to control and eliminate the transmission of the virus. Schools in Singapore closed on 26 March 2003 as a precautionary (54) _____.

About a month into the epidemic, a public education campaign was mounted to (55) _____ Singaporeans on SARS and the adoption of methods to prevent the (56) _____ of the disease. As the public was advised to (57) _____ indoors, shopping malls and restaurants were deserted.

During that period of time, the medical staff in Singapore risked their (58) _____ to save the lives of SARS patients. However, many felt prejudices from the people around them, even from family members. These people were afraid that if they were around the medical staff, they might be (59) _____ with SARS. They avoided sitting (60) _____ to them at tables in crowded food courts and one doctor even had to stay with a colleague because his parents had kicked him out of the family home.

(61) _____ all the prejudices and risks the medical staff faced, they continued to fight the battle against SARS. Sadly, some of them died while doing their medical duty. The four SARS heroes and heroines in Singapore were Jonnel Pabuayon Pinera, a Filipino (62) _____ as a nurse in Singapore, Singaporean physicians, doctors Alexander Chao and Ong Hok Su and nurse Hamidah Ismail. The four of them had unselfishly disregarded (63) _____ own safety in the midst of (64) _____ for SARS patients. They gave up their lives fighting SARS in Singapore.

Along with them, the rest of the medical staff who survived the ordeal are also (65) _____ as heroes and heroines. Despite knowing the deadly dangers of SARS, they bravely risked their lives to battle against the common enemy, SARS.

It was a sweltering hot day in Singapore. The morning sun seethed with ferocity in the sky. The sun was stinging his eyes as Zheng Nian took in the unremarkable sight below him – a sea of yellow. There were hundreds of strangers packed in the vast construction site. They were strangers from various countries, clad in yellow helmets and black safety boots. They had gathered at that site for the same reasons as he had, leaving wives and children behind miles away. From his village alone, a handful had worked in the city-state. Those who did not land a job in Singapore left their village for the bigger, richer cities in China. He had felt compelled to leave like the others to build a better world for himself and his family. “Maybe they are not strangers after all,” he thought to himself. He could not resist leaning forward again from where he squatted, surveying the foreign world below him. He did not feel like he belonged here.

Assigned to pave cement on the roof, Zheng Nian wondered if the ground twelve storeys below him was equally hot. Up on the roof, the ground surprised his feet with the heaviness of heat burning through his safety boots. He thought of his body plunging accidentally down the point of no return. It caused him to break out into cold sweat. He retreated a little from the unfinished edge of the roof.

15

Since his arrival two days ago, the unforgiving heat and humidity in Singapore had persisted. Zheng Nian suddenly thought about his hometown in Hubei – walking in the creeping cold, wisps of winter in the air – when he could think so clearly, so effortlessly. He was usually huddled in layers of wool, scrunching across the snow-swept ground he could barely feel through his winter boots, the milky whiteness in the air blinding him, the harsh cold of winter biting into his heart. Now it was the other way around. Zheng Nian was all ready to ditch the white singlet on him, surrendering it like a white flag to the onslaught of the punishing heat.

He recollected the times spent at the factory where he worked in his hometown, endlessly packing pair after pair of branded shoes into cartons that caused merciless cuts. Sneaking out with his buddies for hot tea and chit-chat sessions had somehow lightened the workload. It did not pay well but it was familiar.

He recalled listening fervently to his supervisor just two days ago during the short thirty-minute journey from the airport to the workers' dormitory. He was to get ready every morning to be picked up and brought to the site. They would work all the way through to five in the evening. Time would be given for their catered meals, including lunch at noon, and they would typically return to the dormitory by eight. At that moment, he could only imagine what his days were going to be like in a land filled with strangers. “Don't worry, you will be well taken care of,” the supervisor

reassured at the end. Zheng Nian could only draw some comfort from his words. The heat rising up from the concrete snapped him back to reality abruptly. The edge of the roof stared at him demandingly. The heat was soon too much to take. His eyes drew a dizzy blank. Before he knew it, his parched body hit the free flight to the ground.	40
Doctors say that it was a miracle that he survived. Yet, Zheng Nian could not seem to shake the tinge of sadness that came with this blessing. Now, lying in the hospital bed, he could neither construct the buildings he had come to construct nor fulfil the promises of the future that was his to keep. Adapted from Two Days in a Foreign Land by Jonathan Tan	45
