Comprehension

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30 based on the passage.

The sun is setting on a summer night. At the entrance of a deep, dark cave, a few bats fly out. Within a few minutes, millions and millions of bats are pouring out of the cave.

Sounds like a scary horror movie? Believe it or not, this scene takes place all summer long, at Bracken Cave in Texas, where 20 million bats come out to feed on insects every night. "It is magical," says Jim Kennedy of Bat Conservation International in Texas. "It is one of the most majestic animal movements on the planet."

Every March or April, Mexican Free-tailed bats migrate up to 1600 kilometres from their winter home in Mexico to the Bracken Cave, where they raise their young. Soon after they arrive, each mother gives birth to one baby. As many as 500 baby bats live crammed into 30 cubic centimetres of space, and all those bodies create nice warm temperatures to keep them cosy and comfortable.

10

If you have ever lost sight of your parents in a crowded playground, you may be wondering how mother bats recognise their offspring. They use their sense of smell to tell which baby is theirs when it is time for the babies to suckle.

15

The cave, a quiet place in winter, comes alive all summer – and not just with bat residents. Bat droppings, called guano, soon cover the floor, providing food for tiny organisms like bacteria and fungi. "Then there are the bugs," says Kennedy. "You walk in with your headlight on your helmet on, and the floor of the cave is seething with bugs. Gnats are flying around, and beetles are crawling up your legs!"

20

When the adult bats leave the cave at night to feed, they are helping humans. They eat lots of insects in a single night, including many pests that eat farmers' crops. They get rid of mosquitoes, too.

When twenty million bats fly out of one cave opening, they make a column so thick that they show up on the radar at the nearby airport. It can take three hours for all of them to emerge from the cave. "You can feel the breeze from their wings, and see the vegetation rustle," says Kennedy. "The flap of all those wings makes a very relaxing soft sound. I've always thought it would make a great relaxation music to help you go to sleep. So much for bats being scary!"

28. The bats in the Bracken Cave _____.

- (1) destroy crops
- (2) feed on insects
- (3) crawl up people's legs
- (4) are used in horror movies

29. Jim Kennedy finds the sound made by the bats flapping their wings to be _____.

- (1) noisy
- (2) hypnotic
- (3) soothing
- (4) annoying

30. Which of the following statements is true?

- (1) Jim Kennedy found bats scary.
- (2) Millions of bats fly out of the cave during the early summer.

Most of the potted plants which we buy from stores come from nurseries. These plants have been grown _____ ideal conditions. When you bring home such plants, it is best to find out more _____ the requirements of each species and how to care _____ them if they do not come _____ a care label.

Indoor plants, commonly grown for decorative purposes, are probably killed more often by improper watering _____ by any other single factor. Too much water or the lack of it _____ be _____ to the plants.

_____ the amount of water, factors like the size of the plant, light and heat also affect how fast the soil _____ dry out. When the soil gets too dry, it becomes lighter. In severe cases, the soil will harden and crack. Proper pot size is another important factor to consider. A pot that is too large will cause root disease _____ of the excess moisture retained in the soil, _____ a pot that is too small will restrict a plant's growth.

If you allow the plants to wilt, some damage may have already been done. Thus, it is important that the plants have sufficient water.

Comprehension Open

Read the passage below and answer Questions 71 to 80 based on the passage.

On Sunday morning, a toddler wearing a diaper and a green T-shirt floated slowly down the Peace River. He was unsteadily balanced on his overturned toy truck, clutching its wheels. The slightest shift in his weight, and he would fall into the cold water of the fast-moving river. He was whimpering in fear.

The boy's name was Danny Jones. His birthday party was set for later that day. He would be three years old. His parents and grandparents were at a riverside campsite about five kilometres away, desperately searching for him. 5

The Jones family arrived on Saturday at the campsite. They were going to celebrate Danny's birthday the next day after fishing and hiking. That afternoon, Danny's grandparents, Anita and James, took Danny for a ride down the river in their speedboat. Danny had a great time. James even let him hold the steering wheel for a little while. When it was time to get off the boat and head back to camp, Danny threw a tantrum. "I'll take you back to this river tomorrow, alright?" James promised. It was only then did Danny reluctantly agree to get off the boat. 10

After the boat ride, the family gathered around the campfire. "I'll look after Danny in the chalet," Anita told Danny's parents, Helen and Tom. "I don't like children sleeping in tents when there're bears around," she said. Danny slept in the chalet with his grandmother while his grandfather and parents pitched their tents. Anita then put Danny to bed. 15

The next morning, Danny woke up early. Anita changed his diaper, gave him a milk bottle and let him relax in the big double bed. She played his favourite movie 'Cars'. From past experience, Anita knew that Danny would usually sit happily for two hours watching it. Before long, she dozed off. 20

When Helen got up and went into the chalet, she discovered that Danny was nowhere in sight. All she saw was the movie playing and Anita sleeping nearby. Helen rushed out of the chalet, and saw James and Tom walking towards her. They had just returned from their morning walk. Her greatest fear was confirmed. 25

"Danny is missing!" Helen screamed in panic as she immediately woke Anita up, threw on her jacket, grabbed her shoes and got into the car with James. |

The family combed the area thoroughly. "Could Danny have returned to one of the places we went to yesterday?" Anita wondered aloud. Immediately, James drove to the playground, but there was no one there. Frantic, they retraced all their routes. Still, there was no sign of Danny. "Danny must have gone to the river by himself! It's all my fault!" Anita wailed, shuddering at the thought that if her hunch was right. 30

Calmly, James told her, "Get a grip on yourself. Falling apart now won't help. We need to find our grandson fast!" Without a moment's delay, Anita called the police.
