(8 marks)

On the island of Crete, Earth Mother had a child called Zan. The bees of the forest brought honey for little Zan and the wild goats gave him milk. They also made some toys for him. Each toy was made of precious metals, and Zan played happily with his toys.

Time passed and Zan grew up. Grateful to his animal friends which cared for him, Zan rewarded them. He made a law that the goats could roam freely. He made beehives to protect the bees. Then, Zan took his toys and hid them carefully in a secret cave where they would be safe.

One day, three men climbed up the mountains to find treasure. They discovered the cave. "There must be a treasure in there," one man said. They put on armour that protected them from the bees and stormed into the cave.

Suddenly, Zan appeared. "Stop!" he shouted. "You have come here to rob and kill. I will let you live, but from now on, you must not tell other people where my cave is." The men shivered when they saw Zan.

He then cast a spell on the men, turning them into birds. One turned into an owl, one turned into a parrot and the last one became a mynah. The birds flew away and were never seen again.
