Comprehension 1 (10 marks)

Read the passage below carefully and answer the questions below.

Once upon a time, there lived a generous and kind-hearted king. His people started to worry for him because he became lazy and would only eat and sleep.

One day, the king realised that he could barely move his body. He invited renowned doctors from various parts of his country and offered them gold to make him fit. He spent much money but it was in vain.

One fine morning, a holy man heard about the ill-health of the king and informed the minister that he could easily cure the king. The minister immediately requested for the holy man to meet the king in the palace. However, the holy man resided at a distant place and he requested for the king to come meet him instead. After much effort, the king met the holy man. The holy man asked the king to come to his place by foot for treatment the next day.

The next day, the holy man was not available and his devotee requested that the king come and meet him the following day for treatment. This was repeated for two weeks and the king never met the holy man again.

After the two weeks, the king realised that he felt a lot lighter and felt more active than before. Very soon, the king regained his health, completely.

The king had a lot of wealth, but no amount of wealth could make him healthy.

Comprehension 2 (10 marks)

Read the passage below carefully and answer the questions below.

Many years ago when the world was new, the Mississippi river was much longer. It zigzagged back and forth across the area that is now Minnesota. Fish in great numbers lived in this river, and its water was so pure and sweet that all the animals went there to drink from it.

A giant moose that lived way up north heard about the river and he too went there to drink from it. He was so big and he drank so much that the water level began to fall rapidly. The beavers were worried. The water around their lodges was disappearing. Soon their homes would be destroyed. The muskrats were worried too. What would they do if the water vanished? The fish were very worried. The other animals could live on land if the water dried up, but they could not. All the animals tried to think of a way to drive the moose from the river, but he was so big that they were too afraid to try. Even the bear was afraid of him.

At last the fly said he would try to drive the moose away. All the animals laughed and jeered. How could a tiny fly frighten a giant moose? That day, as soon as the moose appeared, the fly went into action. First, he landed on the moose's front leg and bit sharply. The moose stamped his foot to shake the fly off. Next, the fly landed on the moose's hind leg and bit it sharply. The moose stomped harder. This caused the ground to sink and the water rushed in to fill it up.

Then the fly jumped about all over the moose, biting him all over his body until the moose was in a frenzy. He dashed madly about the banks of the river, shaking his head and stamping his feet, but he could not get rid of that pesky fly. Finally, the moose could take it no longer and ran back up to the far north country where he had come from.

All the thrashing and stomping that the giant moose did across the country created large and small holes. As these filled with water, they became the 10,000 lakes of Minnesota. The giant moose also told all of his kind to never go south because of the terrible biting flies there. That is why there are few moose in Minnesota except way up north in Canada.
