Many years ago, a fisherman was out at sea when he saw something unusual in the distance. Thinking it was a capsized boat, he rowed towards it to have a closer look. To his amazement, he saw it move and this frightened him. It was a full-grown whale. He rushed back to land and informed his friends about the whale.

Immediately, all of them went to the spot where he had seen the creature. There, they saw the fifteen-metre mammal floating opposite a swamp by the shore. The day after, the whale was found stranded on the shore of the west coast of Malaysia. It was trapped in the swamp and it soon died.

When people heard about the dead whale, hundreds of them visited Morib, the village in which the whale was discovered. However, the body of the dead mammal began to decay, giving out a terrible odour. The smell soon worsened and the carcass had to be burnt.

Firewood was placed around the whale and kerosene was poured over it. Shortly after, the wood started to burn. However, rain began to pour down. After that, the tide came in making it impossible to burn the whole whale. The villagers had only succeeded in burning the whale's head.

He surfed for another hour. Then he thought he saw something that looked like a black triangle. It was about four hundred metres away. He watched it for sometime. He was certain that it was not a dolphin. Then he began swimming towards the shore as quickly as he could.

5

The shore seemed an eternity away. One wave would have been enough to take him to safety but none appeared. To his horror, he saw a shark about two metres away. It was moving very fast towards him. Without any hesitation, he rolled off his surfboard and thrust it between him and the shark. Suddenly, the water around him exploded. Then he was lifted by a tremendous blow and plunged back into the water again. Very quickly, he began swimming towards the shore, expecting to be dragged under at any moment.

10

However, nothing happened. The surfer looked back for a moment. The shark was frenziedly attacking the surfboard twenty metres away, tearing away huge bites of foam. He could not really see the shark through the dark waters.

15

Taking his chances, he decided to swim as fast as he could away from it. The shark might turn to him when it finished with the surfboard. It seemed like hours before he finally climbed up gasping through the breaking waves onto shore. Hands still trembling, he sat at the water's edge till the wind dried the water on his face. Then, he rose and walked back to the car.
