They had been running for a long time now. They two boys pounded through the forest, leaping over immense roots, twisting past dark bushes. They were lean and muscular. The bigger boy was about eighteen and was constantly watching for a hiding place. The smaller boy was about eleven and wanted to curl up and scream.

(21)

The smaller boy ran blindly to the great dark trees that roofed out the sky far over his head, locking his eyes on the feet of the bigger boy as they flitted through the tangled shadows.

More than anything he wanted to stop. But he wanted to run faster, even faster. He knew he could not stop. Ever. Immediately, the sounds of men running seemed louder.

The bigger boy looked over his shoulder and wound his running to a skip and a stop in four strides. He turned back and propped his arms on his knees.

(24)

"Okay?" he panted.

The smaller boy scabbled his feet under him, looking back at the noise with panic in his eyes. He spread his hands before him and levered himself to his feet.

(25)

He forced himself to start running, then staggered and fell.

Read the passage below and answer Questions 26 to 30.

When Flynn, his younger sister Sally and their cat, Nebu, accidentally find themselves adrift in the ocean on an old crate, they undergo a terrifying struggle for survival.

The ship was going to pass them.

"Hey!" Flynn yelled. "Help!" His voice was flooded with alarm. He shouted at the ship until his voice wheezed into a whimper and waved his arms so hard the crate rocked and turned, but the ship might as well have been a mirage. The front of the bridge had disappeared to be replaced by the full side view of an old, very rusty freighter.

"There's nobody there," Sally said.

Flynn could not see anyone on deck and the ship was a kilometre away but the beginning of stern perspective kicked him into action. He jumped to his feet to scream at the ship with what was left of his voice, to dance on the crate, to do anything at all to make someone on that ship see him. But the crate was not big enough to tolerate any violent movement. It tilted as Flynn leapt up. He started slewing as he sought his balance and bucketed under his weight. Flynn reeled around the planks, kicked Nebu from his corner, cannoned into Sally, slipped on the bream and hurtled into the sea. Sally began to bawl from fright and pain, then suddenly stopped and bit her lip.

10

An immense shadow was passing slowly under the crate.

15

Flynn bubbled to the surface and saw Nebu floundering about in the water before he saw Sally and the crate. Flynn waved her down without looking at her. "All right, all right. I'll save your stupid cat again." He stroked towards Nebu.

"Flynn! There's a fish..." Flynn stopped swimming an arm's length from the cat, and looked back at the crate as if he had not quite heard her.

"Fish?"

"Big fish. Enormous fish in the water. Down there." Sally pointed at the quiet depth beneath Flynn. He stopped kicking, looked down and saw something vast move lazily beneath the drifting columns of sunlight in the green and felt very cold. He wanted to run in the water, to move his legs so fast that he would rise out of the sea and sprint across the surface of the crate. He wanted to scream.

25

Nebu kicked and screamed in the water trying to reach him. If he picked it up, the cat would scratch, and he would bleed and the blood would go into the water. Sharks can smell blood kilometres away and then they go mad.

And if he left the cat here in the water, Sally would watch it drown, or get eaten. She would never get over that.

30

The cat thrashed the water and coughed and shrieked and the shadow in the water slowly turned under the crate.

I can't... Anyway, who said it was a shark? Flynn sucked in a deep breath, surged wildly to the cat and plucked it from the water by the scruff of its neck. It could be only a porpoise. He held the cat over his head.

35

"Watch the fish, Sally," he called. He was not going to call it Shark.

"It is still there."

The cat stopped squirming, and was silent, drooping limply from Flynn's grip.

For each of the questions from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

- 26 The words "beginning of stern perspective" (line 8) tell us that Flynn was _____.
- (1) determined to get help
 - (2) overcome by fear and terror
 - (3) left with no choice but to continue screaming
 - (4) afraid of the consequences of being stranded in the sea.
- 27 Sally "suddenly stopped and bit her lip" (line 14) because she _____.
- (1) was thrilled to see the "fish"
 - (2) saw something that frightened her
 - (3) thought it was useless to keep screaming
 - (4) did not want to attract the attention of the "fish"
- 28 The word "struggling" has the same meaning as the word _____ in the passage.
- (1) slewing (line 11)
 - (2) floundering (line 16)
 - (3) drifting (line 24)
 - (4) drooping (line 39)
- 29 The most likely reason that Flynn wanted to call the fish a porpoise was because he _____.
- (1) did not believe his sister
 - (2) was sure it was not a shark
 - (3) did not want to panic any further.
 - (4) wanted to play a prank on his sister
- 30 According to the passage, which one of the following statements is true?
- (1) Nobody from the ship could hear the children.
 - (2) The ship had been abandoned and nobody was on it.
 - (3) The children only thought they had seen a ship in the distance.
 - (4) The currents created by the moving ship caused Flynn to fall from the crate.

(20 marks)

The Jordans never spoke of the exam, not until their son, Dick, was 12 years old. It was on his birthday that Mrs Jordan first mentioned the subject in his presence, and the anxious manner of her speech caused her husband to answer sharply. "Forget about it," he said. "He'll do all right."

They were at the breakfast table. Dick was an alert-eyed youngster with flat blond hair. His mother looked at the tablecloth. "It's just a sort of Government intelligence test they give children at the age of twelve. It's nothing to worry about. Go and read your comics." 5-

The boy rose and wandered toward the window and peered gloomily at the veil of mist that shrouded the glass. "Why did it have to rain today?" he asked. 10
His father replied in vexation, "Because it just did, that's all. Rain makes the grass grow."

"Why, Dad?"

"Because it does, that's all."

Dick puckered his brow. "What makes it green though? The grass?"

"It doesn't matter!" his father snapped, then immediately regretted his abruptness. 15

"Well, Dick," he said, with a manly frown, "you've got an appointment today. It's nothing to worry about. Thousands of children take this test every day. The Government wants to know how smart you are, Dick. They give you this stuff to drink, you see, and then you go into a room where there's a sort of machine ..."

"What stuff to drink?" Dick said. 20

"It's nothing. It tastes like peppermint. It's just to make sure you answer the questions truthfully. Not that the Government thinks you won't tell the truth, but this stuff makes sure."

Dick's face showed puzzlement, and a touch of fright. He looked at his mother, and she composed her face into a misty smile. "You're a good boy, Dick; you'll make out fine. Then we'll come home and celebrate." 25

Half an hour later, they were at the Government Educational Building. They crossed the marble floors and entered an automatic elevator that brought them to the fourth floor. There was a young man seated at a polished desk in front of Room 404. He held a clipboard in his hand, and he checked the list down to the Js and permitted the Jordans to enter. The room was as cold and official as a courtroom. It had long benches flanked by metal tables. Mr. Jordan told Dick, "When they call your name, you go through the doorway at that end of the room." He indicated the portal with his finger. A concealed loudspeaker crackled and called off the first name. Five minutes later, they called the name of Jordan. "Good luck, Son," his father said, without looking at him. "I'll call for you when the test is over." 30 35

Dick walked to the door and turned the knob. The room inside was dim, and he could barely make out the features of the grey-tunic attendant who greeted him. "Sit down," the man said softly. "Your classification number is 600 -115. Drink this, Dick."

Dick downed it, and handed the man the empty cup. He sat in silence, feeling drowsy, while the man wrote busily on a sheet of paper. Then the attendant looked at his watch, and rose to stand only inches from Dick's face. He unclipped a pen-like object from the pocket of his tunic, and flashed a tiny light into the boy's eyes. "All right," he said. "Come with me, Dick." He led Dick to the end of the room, where a single wooden armchair faced a multi-dialled computing machine. "Now just relax, Dick. You'll be asked some questions, and you think them over carefully. Then give your answers into the microphone. The machine will take care of the rest. Whenever you want to start, just say 'ready' into the microphone." 40 45

Dick said, "Ready." Lights appeared on the machine, and a mechanism whirred. A voice said: "Complete this sequence. One, four, seven, ten ..."

50

Mr. and Mrs. Jordan were in the living room, not speaking, not even speculating. It was almost four o'clock when the telephone rang. "Mr. Jordan?" The voice was clipped; a brisk, official voice. "This is the Government Educational Service. Your son, Dick M. Jordan, Classification 600-115, has completed the Government examination. We regret to inform you that his intelligence quotient has exceeded the Government regulation, according to Rule 84, Section 5, of the New Code." Across the room, the woman cried out, knowing nothing except the emotion she read on her husband's face. "You may specify by telephone," the voice droned on, "whether you wish his body interred by the Government or would you prefer a private burial place? The fee for Government burial is ten dollars."

Adapted from The Examination by Henry Slesar

ALL ANSWERS MUST BE IN COMPLETE SENTENCES.

- 71 In the first paragraph, pick a word which tells us that Mrs Jordan was concerned about the examination day.

- 72 Why did the Jordans choose the day of their son's birthday to speak about the exam?

- 73 "What makes it green though? The grass(Line 14)?" What do these questions tell us about Dick?

- 74 Give one evidence to show that Dick's father was clearly annoyed at his son's questions.

75 According to the Jordans, what was the purpose of the Government conducting such an examination?

76 Quote the sentence from lines 27 - 36 which suggests that the place Dick was taking his test was an unfriendly one?

77 Why do you think the children were given some "stuff to drink"(line 20) at the examination?

78 What immediate effect did the drink have on Dick?

79 Dick's mother "cried out"(lines 56-57) when she read her husband's face. Why did she react in this manner?

80 At the end of the story, what do you think happened to Dick and why?
