Section F – Comprehension MCQ (5 x 1 mark)

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

A strong and healthy lion usually prefers to hunt for wild animals rather than to prey on homes of men. In Africa, however, the domestic cattle are often attacked by lions. When the lions are famished, or when the wild animals are difficult to come by, the natives in Africa will lose their capability to protect their cattle. Besides, domestic cattle are easier to kill too.

5

The Africans shut their cattle up in enclosures at night. Nevertheless, hungry lions will climb over the high fences of thorn branches and attack the cattle. Sometimes, they use a different strategy. They will prowl round and roar loudly near the enclosures. As a result, the terrified cattle will break down the fence themselves in their fear and gallop into the open savannah. Once they are out in the open, there is no escape from their predators. Sometimes a very hungry lion will capture an animal in broad daylight right in front of its owner.

10

A lion may lose its initial fear of human beings if it often hunts domestic cattle. It has grown used to coming near villages. This may lead to attacking and killing of villagers when the lion is desperately hungry. If this happens, the lion may develop a taste for human flesh. It will lie in wait for natives almost every night, especially after it has discovered that a child or an unarmed man is an easy dinner. Such a lion is called a 'man-eater'.

15

The 'man-eater' may become a real terror and a threat to the entire village. When a lioness has learned to enjoy the flesh of men, it is most likely to teach all her cubs to feast on human flesh. Such lions can be bold. They will rip the huts of natives to get the sleeping people inside! All the villagers will join forces, combine all strength and organise a lion-hunt when a 'man-eater' is discovered in the village. This is because the villagers understand that until the lion is killed, nobody is safe.

20

Many stories have been told regarding lions. Both white people and Africans have their own versions of heroes who have shown great courage when facing the ferocious beasts. There was this story of a young African. A lion appeared and sprang on one of the sheep while he was looking after his master's sheep. The brave boy counter-attacked the lion with his spear instead of running away. Finally, he managed to kill it but was badly wounded. Later, he was asked why he had fought the lion single-handedly.

25

"Weren't you afraid?" they asked.

"Sure I was frightened," he answered. "But I thought it was best to take the risk rather than to be ashamed all my life for losing the sheep!"

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Choose the correct answer and shade the corresponding ovals on the Optical Answer Sheet (OAS) provided.

26. According to the information in ~~paragraph 4~~ the text, lions may prey on domestic cattle when _____
- 1) they are driven by hunger

 - 3) be afraid of people
 - 4) have the ability to hunt

- 1) prowling near villages
 - 2) being desperately hungry
 - 3) attacking and killing people

29. The young African fought the lion because he did not want to _____

Section K – Comprehension (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80

A few years ago, I stopped at a neighbourhood market for some late-night ice cream. As I got out of my car, a young man hailed me from across the street. He was in his mid twenties and dressed to the nines. I thought he wanted directions and had that urgent late-for-a-party look. When he reached me, he pulled up his sweater and smoothly drew a pistol from inside his waistband. "Get in the car!" he ordered. 5

My brain went into hyperspeed. I remembered watching a personal-security expert on a talk show advise victims not to look at an assailant's face. His reasoning was that if a robber thinks you cannot identify him, he is less likely to kill you. Thus, I focused instead on his weapon – a .38 Smith and Wesson revolver. 10
Then, nervously, I directed my gaze lower. His shoes were highly polished. Strange as it sounds, I admired his style.

The click of the revolver being cocked snapped my head up eye to eye with his. So much for not looking at his face. Instinct told me that a car trip with this guy would turn out to be a one-way journey for me. I held out my keys. "Take my car," I said in a tone that I hoped would not agitate the assailant. "I'm not getting in." 15

He hesitated, then ignoring the keys I offered, he thrust out a hand and yanked off my bag. Then he took a step back, his gun still aimed at me. Neither of us spoke.

Laughter broke the silence, making us both turn. Several couples were leaving a Chinese restaurant on the opposite corner. The gunman gave them a quick scan, then lowered his revolver. Holding it against his thigh, he began to stride quickly across the almost traffic-less street, my bag clutched under his arm. 20

Incredibly, I took off after him. "Hey!" I shouted to the people in front of the restaurant. "This guy just robbed me!" I was halfway across the street when I realised that they were not mounting up. The gunman, now aware of my proximity, pivoted in my direction. A tongue of flame flashed from the snub-nosed barrel, followed by a loud crack. 25

I lost my balance. I felt no pain, but when I looked down, I saw my left leg flopped out sideways at my shin. When I looked, my assailant was sprinting down a dark side street. 30

After that incident, my popularity among my friends soared. People considered me "brave" for running after the gunman. I found it difficult to forgive myself for what I considered an act of great folly. Clearly, I was given credit for something I did not deserve, yet I was reluctant to give up my newly-acquired status. 35

Things went well until the day I was approached by a beggar. On a whim, I told him I had no money because I had been unable to work since being shot in a robbery. His eyes grew large, and it was obvious that the information impressed him. "Wow," he said, then leaped closer, conspiratorially. "Did you get caught?" 40

Your answers must be based on the above passage. Answer in COMPLETE SENTENCES.

71 Give two reasons why the writer did not think that the young man was a robber.

72. According to the advice on the talk show, why should victims of a robbery not look at the robber's face?

73. Why did the writer refuse to get into the car with the robber?

74. Why did the robber hold his revolver against his thigh when he walked away from the writer?

75. Who do you think the word "they" in line 26 refers to?

76. Which sentence in the passage tells you that the robber had fired a shot?

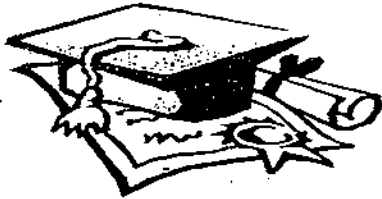

77. Why did the writer suddenly become popular among his friends?

78. Why did the writer say that he was being given credit for something he did not deserve in paragraph 8?

79. What does the phrase "On a whim" in line 37 tell you about the way the writer answered the beggar?

80. Why did the beggar ask the writer whether he was caught?
