Mr Oh has a passion for driving off-road in Malaysia. During these trips, he tackles muddy gullies and (16) treacherous river crossings regularly. "There is nothing like finally reaching our destination by the banks of a river deep in the jungle and setting up camp for the night," says Mr Oh. Being (17) accustomed to cooking outdoors, everybody in the group will take turns to prepare delicious dinners from scratch. They will then dine and chat under the starry sky coupled with the background of insect calls.

Mr Oh also runs ultra-marathons. His badge of honour includes winning the Monster Ultra when he ran the 200km round-island (18) route in 38 hours. Earlier this year, he finished a 100km race in Hong Kong with a (19) cumulative elevation of 4,800m in the mountainous region of Lantau Island - an (20) uphill task for any athlete to accomplish. In preparation for this race, Mr Oh trained by running up the 164m-high Bukit Timah Hill. He added that he had to intensify his training with trail runs in Malaysia too.

In today's world, people are spending less time in the museum as they get exposed to fast-paced online games, flashy websites and short videos. Research has shown that _____ average user on the Internet spends only fifteen seconds on a website (29)

_____ moving to another website. (30)

Visitors are expected to slow down a little when they are in museums full of great artworks. _____, several studies have shown that the average time spent looking at an artwork in a museum is twenty seconds. _____ this short period of time, the visitors are also managing one other thing – taking photographs. (31) (32)

In recent years, museums _____ the world have developed strategies to influence visitors' viewing behaviour. One such strategy _____ celebrating "Slow Art Day". It encourages visitors to take their time to look at just one artwork. By doing so, they are able to notice details. _____ the work which they would otherwise miss _____ just one quick glance. Slow Art supporters believe that with more time spent on (33) (34) (35) (36) studying the artworks, visitors would be able to have _____ better understanding of the artists' ideas and _____ they get their inspiration from to create the work. If (38)

people simply go around the museum like they are checking things off a list, they are not viewing art the right way.

Have you ever wondered if plants can get cancer like animals? Animals unlike plants are complex organisms. Each cell in an animal has a uneeqe purpose. All parts in the animal must function in harmony for the animal to survive. An animal cannot live without their heart, brain or lungs.

(39)

Plants develop in a much more flexible way. As they are unable to move independantly, they have to adapt to their enviroment. As opposed to animals with a fixed set of cells and organs, plants evolving as the conditions change. Signals from the leaves, stem and roots based on light, tempreture, water and nutrient conditions that the plant is exposed to determine if the plant grows deeper roots or large leaves. Radiation and damage to DNA in cells can still result in tumours in plants. However, these mutate cells are restricted to one part of the plant thanks for their cell wall.

(41)

(43)

(44)

(45)

(47)

Since all plant cells have the capacity to create any new cell, such tumours are generally not fatal. The plant can adapt around the damaged cells to continue growing.

(50)

This is why new plants can grow by what was once a stem or leaf. In short, plants can substitute damaged cells or tissues much more easily than animals.

An unsolved oceanic mystery, the Bermuda Triangle is an area of the ocean in which many ships and planes have disappeared. The Bermuda Triangle cannot be found on a map as it does not have (51) _____ exact geographic location. Thus, the name, Bermuda Triangle, is given (52) _____ this area that lies in the Atlantic Ocean between the island of Bermuda, Florida and Puerto Rico. Scientists have said that the number of disappearances is not unusually high, even though some of these disappearances have been very strange.

On 5 December 1945, five US Navy Avenger bombers mysteriously vanished (53) _____ a routine training session known as Flight 19. The flight was led (54) _____ Lieutenant Charles Taylor, who kept in contact with the control tower through the radio until nothing could be (55) _____ from him. The rescue plane (56) _____ was sent to search for the survivors of Flight 19 never made it back either. Six planes and twenty-seven men vanished without a (57) _____ or so it seemed. Did the five bombers simply crash into the Atlantic Ocean or did (58) _____ more mysteriously happen? Up till now, it is still a mystery where the planes went.

Several other disappearances have happened since then. One such incident was when three passenger planes which had radioed that "All's well", meaning things (59) _____ fine, vanished. Another was a cargo ship called "The Mary Celeste". It was carrying goods from New York to Italy. However, it was found adrift and deserted. When the abandoned ship was sighted, the personal belongings of the captain and his (60) _____ were intact. What was baffling was that they were (61) _____ to be four a.

(62) _____ are there so many mysterious disappearances? Over the past centuries, some people have put the (63) _____ on aliens while others think that (64) _____ can be attributed to sea monsters, pirates or a physical force. There is no single theory that can (65) _____ all these incidents of the mysterious disappearances. The ships and planes could have been victims of different circumstances. The Bermuda Triangle is indeed a mystery to many people.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 – 80.

My greatest ambition was to be a comics artist. My classmates often walked past me, glanced over my shoulders and asked, "Can you make a living out of it?"

I was the only person in my class who wanted to be a comics artist. The rest, wanted to be astronomers, business tycoons, mathematicians or doctors. They had their heads in the clouds.

It was not until Friday night when I completed my first full-length, original six-page comic strip. I did not have any idea what to do with it though. Just doing it made me happy. However, I still read and checked through it sixty times over the weekend before finally pronouncing it 'Not too bad'.

That would have been the end of it, except I happened to mention to Michael Lazarus, the only classmate who was interested in my ambition that I had drawn a comic strip. He told me that there was a magazine, Boy Magazine, in Sydney I could send it to. So, when I got home, I rolled my comics up in brown paper, addressed it and put it in my schoolbag where I would not forget to mail it. Lazarus had embedded the idea in my mind.

I hardly slept all night. What kept me awake was the magazine I was sending my comic to, Boy Magazine. I had never liked it because it had the sneaky policy of printing stories, with only one illustration at the top of the page to trick readers into buying the magazine. Did I want my comics to appear in a magazine which printed mainly stories? An awful prospect!

At 2 a.m., I decided no and at 3 a.m., it was a yes. At 4 a.m., it was no again but just before falling asleep, I saw Lazarus' face and he said, 'Publish it!' That decided it.

My father was quite the scoffer and would walk past my room every evening and look in to say, "Morris? They sent you the money yet?" When the letter did arrive from Boy Magazine, did he change his tune? Not one bit. "I don't see a cheque," he said. "Show me the letter."

It read, "We are very interested in your comic strip and would like you to call Miss Gordon to make an appointment to see the editor."

"An appointment? If they wanted it, there'd be a cheque," he mocked.

I called Miss Gordon from a public phone and not from home. I did not want my father around for obvious reasons.	30
"And what day and time will be most convenient for you, Mr. Lurié?" she asked.
"Oh, any day at all!" I shouted.
"Next Thursday at 10 a.m.?" she asked.
"Perfect! I'll be there!" I yelled and hung up with a crash.	35
It had not occurred to me to tell her that I had to take a day off from school to see the editor. I would have to find an excuse to be away for a day from school. I also had to find out how to get to Boy's Magazine by train alone and it was a big worry for my mother unlike my father's concern about receiving the cheque.
I had yet another problem. What to wear? My school uniform was out of the question because it just was not right for a business appointment. My only suit was a year old and too short. My father offered to lend me his suit but he was shorter than me and twice my weight. So, I decided to wear my suit after all.	40
Now, as the day of my appointment drew closer, a great question had to be answered. For my father had been right. If all they wanted to do was to buy my comic strip, they would have sent a cheque. So, there must be something else. A full-time job as a comics artist at Boy Magazine! It had to be that!	45
