Chwee Chan loves his junk food. His ideal meal consists of pizzas, burgers, waffles, washed down with a big cup of bubble tea.

On top of that, he loathes exercising so much that he does what he can to avoid doing anything strenuous. His friends and family often encourage him to engage in outdoor activities and sports. However, these would fall on deaf ears.

One evening, in the middle of another snack after his dinner, Chwee Chan felt a sharp pain in his stomach! He began to break out in cold sweat and had difficulty breathing.

With her heart in her mouth, Chwee Chan's mother called for the ambulance and he was rushed to the hospital. The doctors found that Chwee Chan's heart was in poor condition. He was advised by the doctors that he needed to exercise regularly and watch his diet. After this serious incident, Chwee Chan knew that he had to stop eating junk food and exercise more.

Help Singapore move towards a Zero Waste Nation today! We can all do our part to prevent food wastage!

Singaporeans love food. However, we tend to order, cook or buy more than what we need, resulting in food wastage. Did you know that Singapore generates around 800 million kilogrammes of food waste every year?

Where does food waste come from?

Food waste is generated from households, markets, food centres, supermarkets and other eating establishments.

Where does food waste go?

About 13% of the food waste in Singapore is recycled. The rest of it is incinerated and sent to landfills. Singapore is a small country with limited space. At the rate we are producing waste, perhaps we might need a new incinerator every 7 to 10 years, and a new landfill every 30 to 35 years.

What can we do?

An average household in Singapore spends $14 256 on food a year. Every time we throw food away, part of that amount is wasted. The resources and labour used to produce the food also go to waste, along with the hard-earned money we use to buy the food. However, when we order, buy and cook just enough and store leftovers for use the next day, we save money.

We want to hear from you!

What do you think of food wastage?

Do you have any ideas or solutions to some of the problems surrounding food wastage?

Email us at Comments_from_public@Food Bank.sg.

Be part of our team!

Would you like to join us as a Zero Food Waste Ambassador? Are you committed to making a difference to the food wastage issues which we are facing? Drop an email to our Senior Manager, Ms Corina Sim, at Corina_Sim@foodbank.sg. You don't have to write a long essay to convince us of your passion. Just share with us your solutions, ideas and experiences related to food wastage and why you want to be a Zero Food Waste Ambassador.

Once there was a well-to-do merchant named Mani. He and his wife were very respected by the townsfolk for their charity. They often gave alms to the poor and never turned away a borrower.	1
One day, Mani received some bad news. All his trading ships, which were loaded with valuable cargo, had sunk in a storm out at sea. When all the people who had lent him money for his trading business heard about it, they demanded immediate repayment. Mani fell short of his creditors' demands and had to sell all his possessions to repay them. In the end, he was left with nothing:	5
Along with his wealth, all his friends also deserted him. "A wake of vultures! They had only liked me for my wealth!" he reflected bitterly. Realising that he had nothing to give to his family except troubles in the days ahead, his heart grew heavy. One night, plagued by such a disturbing thought , he fell into a fitful sleep.	10
That night, Mani had a strange dream. A monk appeared in the dream and said, "If you touch me on my head with a stick, I will change into gold—enough gold to last you a lifetime." Next, the monk bowed and Mani saw himself touching the monk's head with a stick and the monk turning into a huge pile of gold coins.	15
The next morning, Mani woke up to the sound of someone knocking at the door. "Can my dream be true?" Mani wondered. His wife answered the door and called out to him, "The barber is here for you!"
"How foolish of me to believe in a dream," thought Mani as he sat down for his haircut and shave.	20
Just then, there was another knock at the door. This time, Mani got up and opened the door. To his surprise, there was a monk at the door. The monk was wrapped in yellow robes and looked exactly like the one who had appeared in his dream the previous night. The monk gazed at Mani in silence and bowed . Remembering his dream, Mani nervously picked up a stick beside the door and, in a daze, touched the monk on his head with it. In a flash, a huge pile of gold coins appeared in front of him where the monk had stood. Mani was speechless yet overjoyed. He sent the barber away with a generous measure of gold coins and requested that he keep things to himself.	25
The barber, having witnessed how Mani had changed the monk into gold, thought, "Now that I know it, I'm going to become richer than Mani! I am tired of cutting people's hair and earning so little money for it." At once, he went to the monastery nearest to his house and invited all the monks there over for a feast.
As soon as the monks entered his house, the barber took a stick and started to strike their heads—blow after blow. The monks shrieked in fear as they scrambled frantically away from what they believed to be a mad man. In the confusion, one of them managed to escape and ran to seek help from the police.	30
The police arrived at the barber's house to find the owner, who was weary by then, shuffling after the monks and swiping feebly with the stick. They arrested him and presented him before a judge.	35
When asked why he had beaten the monks with a stick, the barber replied, "When Mani hit a monk on his head, he turned him into a heap of gold."	40
The judge then called for Mani and asked him if that was true. Mani gave his story in detail and even showed the judge one of the gold coins. After hearing his account, the judge roared in laughter. He then jailed the barber for assaulting the monks without reason and ordered him to compensate them for their medical bills.	45
